

I recommend not approving the request from Nick Leggett. The current commercial transmitters and transceivers ARE repairable, just requiring more care or expertise. Requiring manufacturers to build in repair ease would result in larger and less reliable radios.

I do not believe it was ever anyone's idea that every amateur radio operator would be able to completely construct or repair every piece of equipment used.